WE PICK 56 GREAT-SOUNDING RECORDINGS

stereophile

FEBRUARY 2009

CD playback for the 21st Century

One-box systems
FROM PRIMARE & CARAT

2 great-sounding speakers
VALUE FOR MONEY FROM PSB; INNOVATIVE DESIGN FROM JAMO

Generate your own AC
WITH PS AUDIO’S POWER PLANT

Ultimate disc players
FROM MARANTZ & AYRE

BRYSTON’S BCD-1

45 pages of audio equipment coverage

On-line authority:
www.stereophile.com

$6.99 US
$8.99 CAN
A CRIME OF PASSION? Depraved indifference to the importance of tuneage? Death by music? The simple fact is that most audiophiles got that way by having too many records. That’s right—very few got into this rewarding, non-contact sport because they were aroused by shiny brushed-steel boxes or supersexy speaker grilles. It’s because they wanted to hear their piles of music—their Mahler, Monk, or Rick James—sound the best it could. (And, okay, yes: It is cool to show drooling friends your designer gear.)

It’s in that spirit that we present our annual “Records To Die For” extravaganza. Each Stereophile writer was asked to choose a pair of recordings, be they CD or LP, of music they would not want to live without. The only restriction is that these recordings must still be available, if only in the deeper, darker recesses of the Internet. Not to get all Fireside Chatty or anything, but in these troubled times, investing in great music and gear—from both of which you can derive endless pleasure and fulfillment—seems a smart move for both the wallet and the head. So please, read on and enjoy!—Robert Baird

NOTE: If a recording listed here has previously been reviewed in Stereophile, whether in “Record Reviews” or in past editions of “Records To Die For,” the volume and number of the pertinent issue appear in parentheses at the end of the review. For example, a listing of “(XXI-11)” means that a review of the recording appeared in Vol.21 No.11 (November 1998).
to DIE for

EDITORS’ TOP PICKS

DVORÁK TO DYLAN,
ESSENTIAL MUSIC
WE CAN’T LIVE WITHOUT
So much was made of the marketing of this CD that the music almost got lost. Well, it’s the most approachable album Radiohead has made, but it never cuts corners; Thom Yorke’s vocals are more aggressive than introverted this time, but he still knows how to pine. More rock than psychedelia, they’ve added pianos, celestas, and the wonderful, wacky Ondes Martenot to their palette, which also includes strings and varied electronics. I’m not willing to claim that this is a cheerful CD, but it includes a real love song (the stripped-down “House of Cards”), and a kid’s chorus (in “15 Step”) that contradicts Yorke’s darkness. “Faust Air” is actually reminiscent of the Beatles. But true fans need not fear—the final song, “Videotape,” shows Radiohead at their most layered and complex. What gorgeous music.

John Marks
BANTOCK: Omar Khayyam
Catherine Wyn-Rogers, mezzo-soprano; Toby Spence, tenor; Roderick Williams, bass; BBC Symphony Chorus, Stephen Jackson, chorusmaster; BBC Symphony Orchestra, Vernon Handley, conductor

Orientalism always exercised a tremendous pull on the British imagination, and here are nearly three hours of settings—Irish and suggestive as an Alma-Tadema nude—for vocal soloists, chorus, and orchestra, of verses by a medieval Persian poet. Granville Bantock’s Omar Khayyam (1906–09) is contemporary with Schönberg’s Gurrelieder and Debussy’s Le Martyre de Saint Sébastien, and it displays the same late-Romantic, fin-de-siècle, overripe opulence. But comparisons to late Elgar, early Strauss, and even Mahler are not out of line either. The scale and scope are such that at times I looked up, expecting to see a David Lean film. I mean that as praise. Plaudit to Chandos for pulling off such a gigantic undertaking as this world-premiere recording—and on SACD, no less.

Robert Levine

Haydn: The Creation
Sandrine Piau, Miah Persson, sopranos; Mark Padmore, tenor; Peter Harvey, baritone; Neal Davies, bass; Chatham’s Chamber Choir, Gabrieli Consort of Players, Paul McCreesh

Sung in English, this spotless recording uses the forces Hasdn led at a 1799 performance—200 players and singers—and the effect is epic: the world is being created. The massed brasses and winds, along with the huge choir, remind the listener of nothing short of a Technicolor, Cecil B. De Mille spectacular, except that there’s no kitsch and the details are never blurred—the use of period instruments assures clarity, with flutes like birds, timpani like God’s wake-up calls, and the gut strings alternately mellow and fiercely attacked for emphasis. McCreesh goes for color and expressiveness without being Romantic, and the recording is resonant, bright, and roomy, capturing everything from the gigantic finals of choruses to the soft solo soprano pianissimo without adulteration. The soloists are superb as well. Put it on and sit back. (XXXI-7)

Radiohead: In Rainbows

Sigurd Islandsen (1881–1964) wrote his Requiem, Op. 42, in 1935–36. The work had its premiere in 1943 and was briefly popular in Europe in the post-WWII period, but by 1960 it had vanished. Although the melodic material comes from Norwegian folk songs, the Prelude sounds like vintage orchestral Elgar. Islandsen, who studied with Reger, handles his materials and forms deftly. This requiem is more energetic than down in the dumps; the choral sections with organ fills (Islandsen was an organist) are particularly rewarding. Norway’s own 2L label provides world-class sound in this world-premiere recording; the multichannel program is said to place the chorus behind you. A wonderful rediscovery.

Stephen Mejias
GRUPO FOLKLORICO Y EXPERIMENTAL NUEVAYORQUINO: Concepts in Unity

I remember the day my uncle Edwin introduced me to these guys. I was in the middle of a deep, deep obsession with New York City salsa, and thought I had a pretty good grasp on things. I'd become familiar with the rhythms and the progressions, I knew the percussionists and the brass sections and the solos. But then I heard "Anaboca," and everything I thought I knew about salsa was obliterated. In Grupo Folklorico, a collection of New York City's most versatile and accomplished Latin jazz musicians come together to explore the roots of salsa, and to honor the traditional musical forms of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and Africa. In "Anaboca," bassist Andy Gonzalez enters with a slow and simple four-note riff. He plays it just twice before the song suddenly erupts into a furious and maddening groove. About three minutes in, Manny Oquendo fashions what might be the most powerful timbale solo ever captured on tape—it's the sound of Puerto Rico, Cuba, Africa, New York City, the oceans, the mountains, and the whole damn world coming together to celebrate life. Everything there is to know about everything is banging out in those perfect strokes. Musical genres and cultural boundaries are erased, leaving only concepts in unity. (XXI-2)

JOHN HANDY & THE CONCERT ENSEMBLE: Projections

John Handy, alto saxophone, tenor; Renato; Michael White, violin; Mike Nock, piano; Bruce Cale, bass; Larry Harmon, drums, tambourine.

We were hunting for lost treasures at the Princeton Record Exchange. I pulled Projections from the heavy, crowded stacks. “Know anything about this?” I asked John. “Nope, but it looks cool,” he replied. On the cover, John Handy stands alone, dead center, impeccably and flamboyantly dressed in a bright red shirt, red and black striped tie, light suit jacket, pink pocket square, black slacks, and pointed leather boots. His head is cocked ever so gently to the left, and his sax hangs from his neck to rest comfortably across his torso. His right hand is held at shoulder height, and between two fingers he balances a lit cigarette; his left hand is poised at his waist. Dude looks satisfied—as if his band has just got finished whipping your silly ass from New York to Japan to Brazil and right down to your own front porch, got you all curled up into a blissed-out ball of so much useless flesh with all their violent plucks and thunderous attacks, searing solos, seductive melodies, free-jazz explosions, and bossa nova sway, and left you dumb and wondering and begging: Why the hell have I never heard of these guys before, and where, please, can I get some more—like now, fast?

---

Paul Messenger

FLEETWOOD MAC: Tusk

The record-breaking global success of Rumours doomed its much-delayed, way-over-budget follow-up, Tusk was criticized as overblown, self-indulgent, and lacking direction, all of which had some truth. But it has weathered well. Revisited 30 years on, it's a mostly enjoyable if disparate collection of high-class AOR that's worth a place alongside the Beatles' "White Album" or the Stones' Exile on Main Street. I can't speak for the remastered CDs, but system improvements now cut through the overproduction that made the original vinyl confusing, allowing fresh enjoyment of these fine songs and subtle, complex arrangements.

---

ENNIO MORRICONE: The Soundtracks: 75 Themes from 53 Films

Everyone's music collection should include some Morricone. The music establishment might sniff at film soundtracks, but in my opinion they'll be remembered long after most "serious" modern music is forgotten and ignored. Morricone, especially when helping director Sergio Leone reinvent the Western, is a great innovator, adding wit, charm, and tension in his usual use of voices, whistling, and strange instrumentation. Although I bought an LP of the original soundtrack album of The Good, the Bad and the Ugly back in the 1970s, finding a good collection proved difficult—until I discovered this Italian compilation, which, at $20 for five CDs, is also a bargain. Hours of Googling have failed to find any provenance whatsoever, though the scores, different from the performances on my OST, have presumably been rerecorded—and to a very high standard.

---

FRED MILLS

JACOBITES: Robespierre's Velvet Basement

Rock writers generally don't get groupies, but sometimes our proximity to rock stars makes the notion theoretically ... achievable. When Nikki Sudden's post-Swell Maps outfit, the Jacobites, issued their second LP in 1985, yours truly was so smitten by the British group's edgy blend of the Rolling Stones, the Velvets, and vintage blues that I wrote a hyperbolic 1000-word review. Five years later, Sudden comes to town on a rare US tour and, remembering my name, greets me like an old friend. In the dressing room after the show, I'm guzzling his Jack Daniel's and watching him paw a local groupie known as the Dragon Lady. Noting my apparent envy, Sudden leans over to whisper in the ear of another lissome lass who'd come backstage. She promptly gets up, walks over, slides onto my lap, and begins, ever so delicately, to nibble on my earlobe ... (XXIV-2)

---

U2: War

This edition of the 1983 album War, part of Universal's ambitious overhaul of U2's back catalog, boasts a bonus disc comprising a dozen remixes, rarities, live tracks, and B-sides. It's the significance of the original LP, however—key cuts such as the soaring anthem "New Year's Day" and the violin-fueled swooner